

Share a Story. Celebrate Women in Forestry.

Have you been inspired by a woman in forestry?

She might be a colleague, mentor, friend, family member, or a figure from the past—someone who taught you vital lessons, supported your journey, or is simply exceptional at what she does. We want to hear about her.

Women have long played a crucial role in forestry, often without recognition. From the Women's Timber Corps known as the “Lumberjills” who worked tirelessly during the Second World War, to the women shaping the sector today, these stories deserve to be remembered and shared.

Take part:

- Write your story below and hand to an RFS staff member at the Annual Study Tour, or Email your
- contribution to elle.mcallister@rfs.org.uk

Any photographs would be happily received and credited appropriately but please ensure you have permission for RFS to publish them online before sharing them.

Why it matters

Your contribution will become part of an RFS digital archive of women in forestry history—helping to honour those who came before us, preserve rural and women’s stories, and inspire future generations to follow in their footsteps.

Every story matters. Help us ensure these voices are not lost.

Name:

I am inspired by (full name):

Why?

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

(Please continue on reverse if needed)